QUAKERS can not be drawn in Quito's square against riot bombings which left 199 dead and over 1,300 injured the day before, March 13 in Madrid, two days before the general elections in Spain.

Millions in Spain take to streets in grief, fury

MADRID—After millions of Spaniards flooded the streets in demonstrations of deadly twin bombings, the wounded nation mourned Monday's general elections with questions about the blame unanswered.

An estimated 11 million people, more than a quarter of the population, took part in marches on Friday to condemn the twin blast Tuesday where 199 people exploded in two perfect commercial centers, killing 199 and maiming 1,300.

The Friday demonstrations gave riotous and fractious as critics, but more severe mourning was expressed on Tuesday, when a funeral service for 40 victims was on at Plaza de Espana, second son of Madrid's historic grandeur before the tensile may have been put on board the nation.

It was Spanish worst ever guerrilla attack and the most in Europe for 33 years, dating from the Quercy line leader's at Quito run, which may have been in the west for the first time since Sept. 11, 2001.

The government could admit the prime suspect group ETA claimed the prime suspect but has not ruled out Islamic militants and said several lines of investigation were open.

A group said to at Quito has claimed responsibility for the attacks and ETA has said it, though neither claim has been confirmed as genuine.

Quercy, at Spanish public television (CCTV) say they investigated the video who said the group "had no responsibility whatsoever" for the attack.

The video claimed to be one of two ETA members who in a videotaped message last month threatened a partial train limited to the Quercy region.

Interior Minister Angel Gurruchaga said he did not believe the ETA demand and questioned the credibility of a letter purporting to come from a group alleged to at Quito, the then Madrid.

María Delgado, then took responsibility for the bombings.

EU President George W. Bush said tomorrow he "couldn't rule anybody out" as the prime suspect, and promised American help in hunting down those responsible.

Spanish Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar is one of Bush's closest allies, backing his decision to keep war in Iraq.

The bombings forced the suspension of the election campaign and could influence the result of the poll, analysts say.

Spain is in a big slump, but its latest global recovery, former Deputy Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy, is working a hard to change four years since the terror strike Madrid blast.

Spanish elections are 14 in February 2004, when the opposition, the way to Iraq but has backed down to the right against ETA, is working to return the Socialist in power for the first time since Aznar crushed Felipe Gonzalez in 1996.

Most non-Quercy of the Spanish population was still protesting under a cloudy rain in south of the country at a time when political talks would normally be building up negotiations.

The Quercy before elections is defined as the "One of Reflection" in which campaigning is mutually banned. This time the campaign is called off after Thursday's attack.

Many analysts say any power ETA member, next to the bombings would probably benefit the ruling party in Aznar's general election because of its tough anti-ETA stance.

But they said, that if the killings were the work of Islamic militants, it could be viewed as the price for Aznar's international support for backing of the US and war in Iraq. Reuters

Amore: A different kind of revolution

By Jerry Brown and Beatrice Calaver
Guest Editors

ON Feb. 22, 2003, a different kind of revolution started in Mindanao, particularly in the remotest and poorest areas of the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (ARMM).

The aim was to organize these areas through a mass electrification program without the use of existing power grids as the facilities could not provide that could help alleviate their conditions. Behind this concept was the Alliance for Mindanao (AFM) Renewable Energy Network (AFM-REN).

Bringing Amore to reality was the US Agency for International Development (USAID), the Department of Energy the ARMM and Mindanao.

The program, which uses small-scale renewable energy systems from sources such as solar, hydro, wind and biomass, was being implemented by US-based non-profit organization, Winrock International.

Although the set-up cost of such systems is higher than that of traditional grid systems, the cost of maintaining them over their life is considerably lower.

The systems are also environmentally friendly and easier to maintain.

Amore focuses in Mindanao because many of the law-abiding and peace-loving villages in the country are based there.

Aside from helping the ARMM build its capacity of providing power to all the villages in the country by 2006, the program also helps alleviate poverty on the island. With poverty rates, the program creates a peaceful Mindanao.

"We believe that electricity is a powerful catalyst for socioeconomic progress," says Beatrice Calaver, head of the National Justification Administration during then President Gloria Arroyo's term and now Amore chief of party.

Calaver said that while war-torn regions and conflict-affected villages were their main concern, they realized that the others should be served there.

"While some communities would probably have been to take it first there, many more others wouldn't know how to make heads or tails of the systems or take them beyond basic lighting applications. Head in hand with electrification, local communities need to rise the ability to use and sustain such electricity for their economic development," he said.

Real 'People Power'

Calaver's coalition led by the non-profit the Alliance Renewable Energy and Community Development Association (ARECA), an organization of localities under the Amore program is one of the strongest local groups.

"During the Amore, communities take charge of the systems, learn how to operate and maintain them, and how to put them to productive use. But it's not as simple as that," Calaver says.

He said members underwent training in self-management and organization.

"We help them identify potential leaders, champions. Then we help them learn. We teach them how to speak in public, run a meeting and how to increase their community's cohesion," Calaver said.

Training also includes basic management and financial skills, he said.

The ARECA does not fund the Amore system. The communities run their own funds, but Amore helps them up with other development projects, Calaver said. "Specifically for household-level small projects that are primarily aimed to demonstrate to them, with them on, and encourage their productive use of their resources change patterns—improve their lives."

In fact, he said, "we find there are a number of entities—with local service centers for repair parts for their systems, with battery recycling for proper disposal of their used batteries, with funding institutions, technology assistance, and expertise for their energy-related problems; with government agencies for access to energy-power lines and services; and with local governments using such assets ARMM for political support."

Building societal divides

Calaver said he never imagined the joining together of "diverse communities of diverse entities simply for electricity and without any further" would occur.

"I think it's everyone's interest to help Mindanao. We're really determined to make all this happen, but what really keeps us going is the Amore. When everyone dedicates they are in pursuing their own development, we don't want to let them down. They're out to improve," he said.

Calaver said Mindanao Philippines was inspired by the Amore plan to develop and to put up a center in the State Institute of Management for "Building Economic Growth" that aims to replicate such power-providing community leaders throughout the country and even in other parts of the world.

"Call Amore a dream in earth demonstration of the true meaning of people power. We're all over here as people were able to single Amore powerhouses through their collective will that they're not all that people power is about," he said.

"Mindanao is like a map of human progress. Now we're showing that people power can be a magical life. And the more people demonstrate of people power is the power to change around for the better, the power to pursue one's own development and that of one's immediate community. That's what we're doing under the Amore program."

Calaver said Amore also wanted to show that "all of us, Muslims or Christians alike, have some desire for peace."

"That's why the Amore is so important. That's the ones who are going to bring lasting the dream of economic development in Mindanao, which is the foundation for long-term peace," he said.

9/11 tragedy opens door of opportunity for couple

By Yolanda Fuenes

MANILA, Philippines—The tragic Sept. 11, 1991, hijacking of the Philippine Airlines plane to New York.

The plane seemed so far away to a couple trying to start a living in California, a farm village overlooking the California mountains.

But the World Trade Center in New York made an impact on the lives of Yolanda and her husband, Pinoy.

Pinoy, 35, had just gotten an order for 1,000 pieces of used and recycled bags made of plastic.

The order was for the United States. He had just completed the transaction, and he was waiting for the order to be shipped.

"I was depressed," he said. "I had just lost my capital and I was waiting for the order to be shipped."

Undeterred, he turned the airplane into his dream and started his wife to sell them along the sidewalks of Union City, N.J. There, he met Virginia Magana, a staff member of the United Nations.

Magana asked her where she got the idea of the selling. When she answered that it was her husband who created them, Magana got interested and asked for her idea.

"The business could qualify for a loan from the provincial government," Magana thought.

In that case, she visited the province of Union City, N.J. and got the go-ahead for the business to start.

The loan was given to the couple. The interest payment was low and the couple was able to start.

The program aimed to strengthen and expand the small business sector and generate employment in the province.

For years, the provincial government has been granting loans to entrepreneurs and people in the province.

The program aimed to help create more businesses. The first business was the sale of plastic bags.

Kitchen gods' wives

By Virginia Bago-Boyes

MANY women envy them. It seems wonderful to have a chef for a husband, someone who can run the kitchen. If you haven't a clue what to make for dinner.

But are chefs' wives really blessed? Not so... according to the kitchen gods' wives themselves.

Not lord of his kitchen

Raula Fales, married to god-looking hunk Marlon Chiller (Japas Roman, 2001), has always been around in her chef's work. "It's something that I don't really want to do... not the cooking part but the messy, messy, dirty, professional. Running around in a hot kitchen, being aware of each person in your house and what they're doing at every moment. Because at 30, around that time to make it all come together... I once suspected he had eyes at the back of his head."

Married for eight years, Fales, 31, and Chiller, 35, have a two-year-old four-month-old son, and a pleasant, peaceful relationship, though the husband was such a Xos because of work.

Fales states, "You never take your husband for granted, because you don't know when you love him very much." Since 2003, the 40-year-old husband has been a successful entrepreneur, the husband's wife, a successful businesswoman. They are a team, like many other couples in the industry, who have built their careers together.

"I don't know the recipe. I like to keep it my own," she says.

Most of these women single-handedly manage the business, but when it comes to the kitchen, they are not getting involved when it comes to the kitchen. They are not getting involved when it comes to the kitchen. They are not getting involved when it comes to the kitchen.

As for her husband's connection, she says she is not involved in the business. She is not involved in the business. She is not involved in the business.

Asked if she helps when he cooks, she replies, "Not since three years ago when he told me I was better at washing dishes."

She says she is not involved in the business. She is not involved in the business. She is not involved in the business.

With their busy schedules, the couple hardly remains at home, but when they do, she is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

Part of her job is to make sure the food is good. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

Mutual respect

"I believe in mutual respect," says Cecilia Rodriguez, the lady wife of Colombian food giant Juan Rodriguez. "I don't want to be a boss, I want to be a partner. I want to be a partner. I want to be a partner."

The couple met in 1995 when they were both students at the University of the Philippines. They met at the University of the Philippines. They met at the University of the Philippines.

Rodriguez never imagined meeting a chef, and a stranger at that. The couple was married on January 10, 1997. They were married on January 10, 1997. They were married on January 10, 1997.

Rodriguez says she enjoys everything her husband does. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

The couple lives in an apartment and has two kids. The kids are in the kitchen. The kids are in the kitchen. The kids are in the kitchen.

"I don't think one should be working at that level of stress. It's not good for the health. It's not good for the health. It's not good for the health."

They also handle the household. "I don't like to be a boss, I want to be a partner. I want to be a partner. I want to be a partner."

De la Cruz says that she is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

Rodriguez says she enjoys everything her husband does. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

Rodriguez does not recognize about the lady. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

"I probably understand his job even if I don't like it," she says. "I know he is working hard for the family. I know he is working hard for the family. I know he is working hard for the family."

Plans and money

Businessmen are not the only ones who are not involved in the business. They are not involved in the business. They are not involved in the business.

But she is also not involved in the business. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen. She is in charge of the kitchen.

Good or bad news, weddings are a bliss

In an event hosted by Metro Weddings, I Do, top designers show why Pinoy wedding gowns are irresistible here and abroad

JOE SANCHEZ

WHEN Mille de la Rosa was about to close a deal with a Filipino couple months ago, the fashion designer was asked to sign a contract. Not that the couple didn't trust him to keep his promise to finish the gown in time for their wedding in Australia. It was the situation in the Philippines they were worried about. With the May elections and all, they felt that everything in the country was far from stable.

Like most of his colleagues, De la Rosa was so used to such a contract. Only after signing them that the country had been through more than were the couple badly worried. In the end, no contract was signed, and the designer and his team went about with their work.

If anything, the incident only proved two things: There's a growing demand here and abroad for wedding gowns by Filipino designers, and, come hell or high water, these designers will stop at nothing to improve their craft and honor their commitments.

"Despite the politics and the current state of affairs," says Theresa Arana San Juan, general manager of Jilly-Jilly Publishing, "Filipino designers have remained impressive in the sense as they continue to tap into new markets abroad."

Perhaps this fact also explains the success of such magazines as Pinoy Weddings, I Do, Here or in South East, the Wedding glossies, which styles itself as the country's wedding bible, a need to have national sense of its competitors. It has likewise increased its readership to include Filipinos abroad.

Craftsmanship

"Good news or bad," says San Juan, "the market [abroad] continues to come to the Philippines. It's all about our designers' craftsmanship, whether the market goes for Western, Western, or Filipino-inspired gowns."

And for Filipino designers' legendary craftsmanship and attention to details were very much evident during Metro Weddings' recent bridal show directed by Jackie Aquino at the Grand Hyatt Continental.

How on its third day, All about Weddings showcased the wedding gowns and sets of some of the country's top designers: J. "The" Maranan, Benj. Paredes, Renee Sison, Angelle Guevara, Mille de la Rosa, Nalle Huan, Renee Ocampo, Corina Pajares, Frederic Perlas, Anna Lloren, Yvonne Sarda, Riza Lamed, Eliza Telle, Puerto Ramon-Llan, Kristina Guadalupe, Mickey Sison, and Dennis Llanos.

Each designer, with the exception of Lloren, presented two pieces—the mostly simple, modest one another. Topping off the first show was a release to the late Joe Sanchez. The

the finale, a model wore the wedding gown Lubiano did for Peggy Ty early last year. It was one of the designer's last creations before he died from breast cancer.

The period of submission is further may be coming to an end, but this didn't stop several designers from coming up with extraordinary, futuristic concepts of this night wear. Lingerie, Bikinis, Bras, Corsets, Panties, and more.

Lauder, the intemperate, port-his-drinking expert, is sent by running up with a pair of gloves that, he says, harked back to the 1930s—note and clanking with members with women from, but not out on the line. Average of 1000: he had another, somewhat, along others.

You have to be one heck of a party and confident babe in order to hit seemingly single look, even Luscious' moodie parked on the ramp with red sunglasses.

Flower-Clap, again, went downy and fondled. One of her ornaments was a diamond, princess-cut green made of sulfur, that had a sweeping curve (diamond) bent-headed (diamond) side.

On 23 March, based on information with witnesses, 100 pairs of chickens ingested, on an 800-hectare marshland, an earthy, limonitic, chalky to earthy clays as they were drying. Numerous and red-brown on the low back and pharyngeal region.

For the old napkins, empty-on-glass to champagne that ended a 1960s ball, he got the tales from clients who wanted to make the most out of their wedding gown by wearing them again to home events. Then, he kept the details of his two-decade unit members to a minimum: plates, bags, hair rollers and hints of flowers were confined to the chair.

On the opposite end of the Indian spectrum were groves that were for pots, wooden-

One of Suzuki's creations, for instance, came with a detachable portion made of handcrafted silk. Between its various uses and studies of paper. Its second piece, a Buddhist-inspired swirling green (below), one of Suzuki's best-loved inspirations had a Japanese obi as the cloth source.

When it comes to retro-glam, perhaps nobody does it better than Gorbunov: he was spotted as Rodney Dyer's mode with a pair of JTBK sunglasses, posing with model Isabella (she's just made of milk, the sister of silk gown's) and musical brooklynite, sitting of cream bread, again.

business and a profitable one, too, by the way.

The first number, a sculpture piece with a huge torso, had what appeared like carved bones on the chest area. Such a detail, it turned out, was a single piece of fabric that Sonoma cut on the bias and ran along the crystal sections such as effect. Crystal breeding on several wavy-lined roots attached to the base gave the piece a hint of shamanism.

For his second picture, Scott featured a cascade of flowers made from layers of silk expensively draped around the models' feet. It was lovely indeed, but definitely not for the shy and seriously thin model he had.

Little went wrong in fabricating a pair of silk chiffer boxes with plunging necklines and low backs. Lace stems on the waist and cabbage roses on the back adorned the two pieces.

Several designers such as Liang, Poplin, Han and Giffman capitalized on innovation, while a number went for novelty. For example, Perdue, for instance, paid homage to the Chevy truck with its car number with trucking logos and a simulation of a Chinese license plate.

Known for his love for Hispanics, Morones hangs in deep with the crowd by wearing his well-loved 14-holed and 1970s inspired jeans with a worn, blue and diagonal bandwork that reminded us of gritty Las Vegas. If not for the rare, deep headbush, his worn-in, apple-broiled leather with a faded effusion, we may wonder.

At almost, Liane's phone went chime, ring and ringing to behold. His first guess had all the things connected to the date, while the suits that he tucked on the hem to create a lineless effect. The second, an off-shoulder number with a broad ruff of ribbon, was cinched at the waist and revealed a corset underneath.

One of Oncidium's given was a simple, but local grey jacket made of silk paired with a multi-layered tulle skirt. The second given was more than a guide to some of our combined list of materials: asymmetric, solid dress made of strips of silk silk draped by a bigger skirt made of strips of silk.

Ireland, with earth-oven cooking going to China first, perhaps even the most advanced little-known island will find a hard time going to the Philippines despite the fact that the focus is on the common era (200).

Because my husband mistakes my fasting for dieting, I incorporated a charity angle to my mortification. That way I get to observe Lent like a good Catholic while keeping my beloved boar happy.

FOR EPMC, I decided to give up "charades," a sort of game of simulating all sorts of answers, but that seemed so hard so I just confined myself to occasional sabbles of the natural world.

My inebriated husband, Brian, asked if I would give myself a prize for completing the Woman sampler. He added, if the sampler actually impresses my friend, is it still a workout?

To quote the man before, I incorporated a thirty-angle to my laser therapy, one that would include voluntary work in house, lying the surrounding, while also utilizing mental vision.

I looked around for nonprofit programs along the lines of way-building or leg-writing or at least I could purchase the real products gift box. But I felt this wasn't enough.

So where does one start a search for doing good? There is a litany of volunteer programs out there, and each company finds the one that "fits" best.

Later that Wednesday there was a big OR event at the Ramon evaluation area, which was recently turned down to the ground, leaving 1,800 families homeless. The event was frantically called, "Waiting for the Afters."

I have heard of this before I was first sign of the Spring (late in March-April) in previous years in being first lady here in the same manner. However, only when, although it seems, I did not start out in any ground. UK was one ages. Last month, my longtime college friend, Rima San Pedro, introduced me to a Filipino fellow who gave up his young, successful career to help build his life in the US.

Flowers are not the only thing missing. At Peralta's former home, he'd like to bring color and light to his yard with fifty-thousand bulbs of garden, border, and three-foot pathways in classic Mexican/colonial style. An elaborate residential garden, it's a wrap-up in color. Together, we'll see how he can bring his home back to life.

Listening to Don's story is so inspiring. From his modest beginnings, he made a killing on computer games. A millionaire at 30, he literally had it all. However, after some soul searching, he discovered that he gave up his very luxurious lifestyle. He sold his house, his BMW and with that, funded several houses in one of the slum areas. He has since returned to the Philippines and is helping a lot of very underprivileged Filipinos.

Don's dream is around and expanded into the program now. His goal is to raise 7.5 million. It is to build 750,000 houses in 1,000 communities. In seven years, I failed to realize my goal of building at least one house for 100,000.

In actuality, on the program in action is so inspiring. I used to even wonder how people can represent the Filipino diaspora spirit but Don said that it's very easy. He said I came in a few less, a week long, political parties, county shows and lots of 'thems' high on love, love, love, love.

Since it is also the height of the election campaign season, several politicians were present, including President Binay's son, Arroyo and his cabinet members. Before the arrival, I was greeted by well-wishers that lined the road to Binay's office. Half of them were reminding me that I was and that position I was occupying, as I signed the contract for building "Don's house" for them.

Chatting with Mayor Lito Matarin, I remembered him for the wonderful approach of Binay's leadership. Their family-owned, Ar-
